‘Putting Values at the Heart of UK Society’

Contents

This presentation addresses three questions:

- What is the UK Values Alliance?
- What are values and why are they important?
- How can we engage with values?

What is the UK Values Alliance?

We are a collaborative group that is seeking to promote values in society

Why did we form?

- We formed as a result of the UK National Values Survey (October 2012), which revealed a significant gap between the personal values of UK residents and their perception of the prevailing national values.

- The group has grown as we attract people from all walks of life who have an interest in the subject of values.

UK Values Alliance

Our purpose

To build a better UK society by helping individuals and organisations live their values.

How will we do this?

- By raising awareness and understanding of values and their benefits to individuals, organisations and society
- By helping to articulate the importance of aligning behaviour to values in practice
- By working together as an alliance with a common set of values.

What are the UK Values Alliance values?

Our organisation's values are:

- compassion
- learning
- collaboration
- empowerment
- making a difference.

What are values and why are they important?

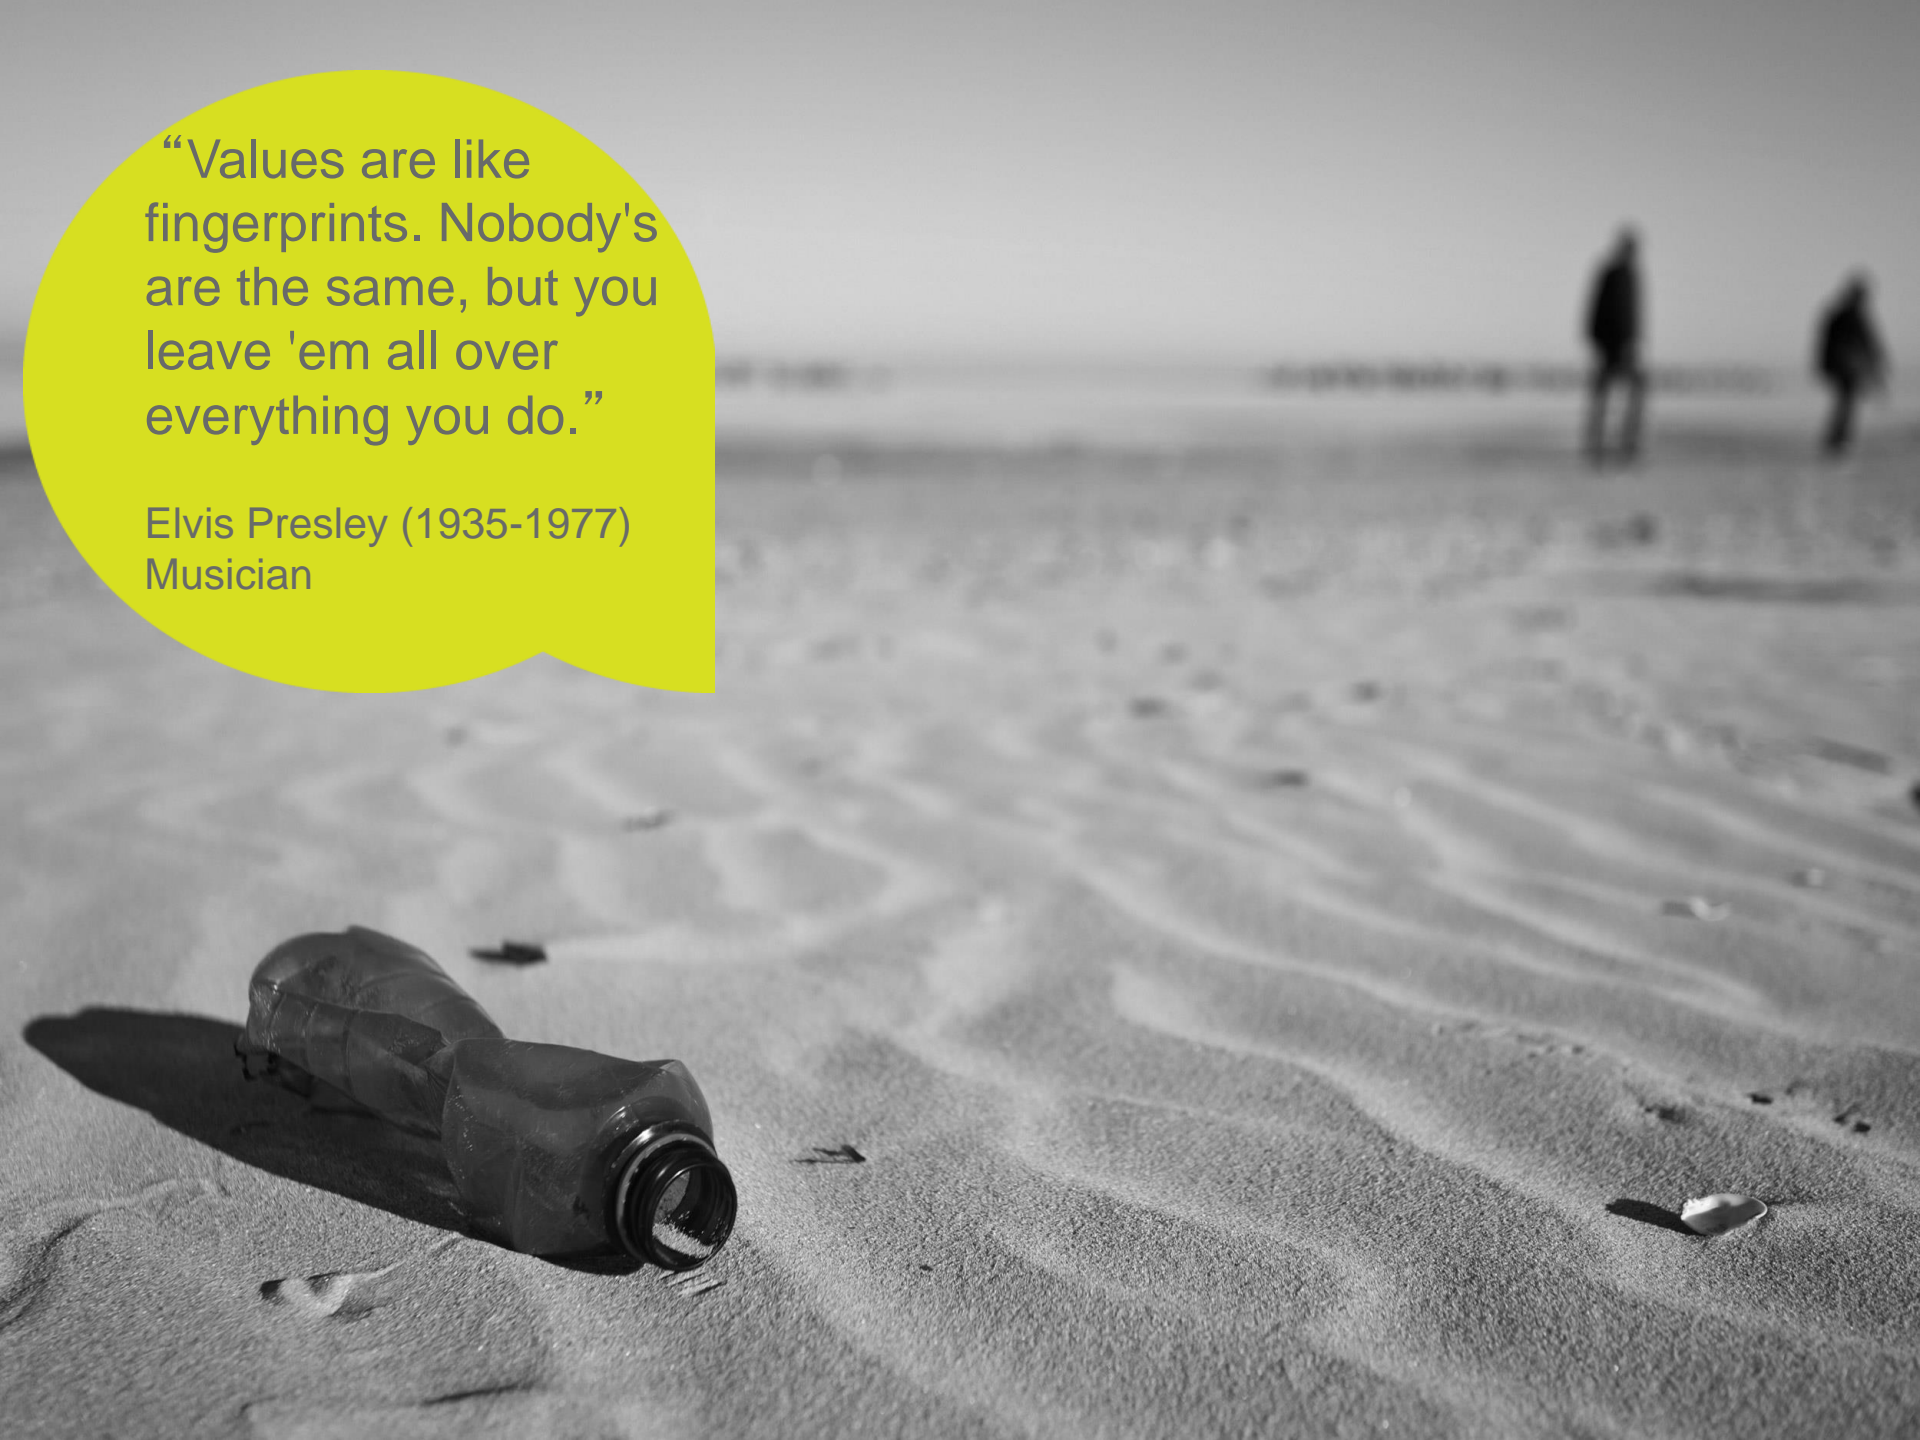

What are Values?

For us...

- Values are the things that are important to us
- They are deeply held principles that guide our choices and behaviours and influence our emotions
- They help define who we are, what we believe and how we live.

“Values are like fingerprints. Nobody's are the same, but you leave 'em all over everything you do.”

Elvis Presley (1935-1977)
Musician

What's the focus?

Values operate at many levels

Our focus is:

- Personal
- Organisational
- Societal.

Why are values important to us personally?

For us, they help to provide

- A sense of clarity, authenticity, empowerment, self-control, choice and self-worth
- More meaning to life
- A foundation for effectiveness, happiness, fulfilment and success
- Improved personal, emotional, spiritual and physical wellbeing
- A compass for life, guiding decision-making, communication and behaviour
- A way to keep our behaviours consistent with what we believe to be important
- A means to portray a consistent view to others of who we are
- Enhanced personal and work relationships.

“Find people who share
your values, and you'll conquer the world together.”

John Ratzenberger

Why are values important to organisations?

For us, they help provide

- Encouragement of appropriate and consistent behaviours in support of the organisation's purpose
- A consistent, desirable, recognisable and predictable culture
- A clear framework for decision making
- A sense of authenticity and identity that enables customer choice.

.....and deliver beneficial long-term outcomes, such as:

- A more consistent customer experience
- Employee attraction, motivation, fulfilment, loyalty and retention
- Increased productivity and achievement of organisational aims
- Better relationships with all stakeholders
- Improved collaboration and sustainability.

“It's not hard to make decisions when you know what your values are.”

Roy Disney

Why are values important to society?

For us they help provide

- A framework for members' behaviour and interactions
- Happier communities, in which people relate better to each other and focus more on the common good
- A happier and more sustainable society with greater understanding, choice, consistency, openness and collaboration
- Enhanced emotional, spiritual and physical health and wellbeing
- A better alignment between the interests of its members and its government
- An improved balance between the need to serve oneself and others in society.

How can we engage with values?

How can people engage with values?

- Become more conscious and aware of them
- Better understand their own values and what they mean for themselves and their interactions with others
- Use them to inform their choices and drive their behaviour, communication and emotional response
- Be true to their own values and live their lives in line with those values
- Be open to exploring tools such as reflection, meditation, mindfulness, coaching, conscious practice, feedback, personal profiling etc.

"The more choices
you have, the more
your values matter."

Michael Schrage

How can organisations engage with values?

- Understand and select organisational values that support their purpose
- Raise awareness of the organisation's values and what they mean for leadership, management and employees and their interactions with others
- Translate the values into practical employee behaviour
- Surface the experience of the organisation's values in practice and how this differs from desired values
- Encourage and reward alignment of choices, behaviour and communication to values through appropriate policies, processes and systems.

In the background, several wind turbines are visible against a clear sky. A large magenta speech bubble is overlaid on the left side of the image, containing text.

"Now more than ever,
organisational values
should be at the forefront of business
leaders' minds"

Peter Cheese, Chief Executive
CIPD

How can society engage with values?

- Encourage discussion about values and their role in the community
- Recognise and celebrate people and organisations that demonstrate consciousness of values
- Support people and organisations to live according to their values.

“Tell me what you pay attention to and I will tell you who you are.”
